Bedroom Decor

Kelly was thrilled to finally spend some time decorating the master bedroom. "I wanted a nice, comfortable space, but we'd never taken the time for us – we'd done the kid's bedrooms and other rooms in the house first," she explains.

Mark came up with the design for the legs of the cabinetry based on a motif from an ottoman in their living room.

Practical luxury

Kelly and Mark Adrian moved into their Beaconsfield home several years ago and were excited by the prospect of enjoying the cozy comfort of the fireplace that served as the focal point of their master bedroom. In no time however, reality proved to be a little less romantic than the fantasy. As Mark rhetorically comments, "Who wants to constantly have to lug wood upstairs to their bedroom?" Moreover, the couple realized that they needed more closet space and would be better served by removing the fireplace in order to have the additional storage. This project also helped satisfy their need for a more practical luxury – a larger en suite bathroom.

With the removal of the fireplace came built-in cabinets, custom-designed and installed by Cuisines West Island Kitchens (CWIK). They incorporated a number of Mark's ideas, as well as "his n' hers" clothing spaces. Despite their desire for the modern convenience of built-ins, the couple still wanted the room to exude an "old-world" charm. "I've always liked that shabby chic look," explains Kelly. After considering a number of options offered to them by Derrick Bourdages of CWIK, they decided upon notched doors with an antiqued eggshell finish, accented by wire mesh panels.

With plenty of new storage space that was so seamlessly integrated, a walk-in closet was removed to allow for the expansion of the en suite bathroom.

The Adrian's beautiful bedroom redesign and renovation proves that practical certainly doesn't have to mean boring, and that sometimes comfort and convenience can be the greatest luxuries of all!
